Internal communication – Why does it matter?

Rising executive pay

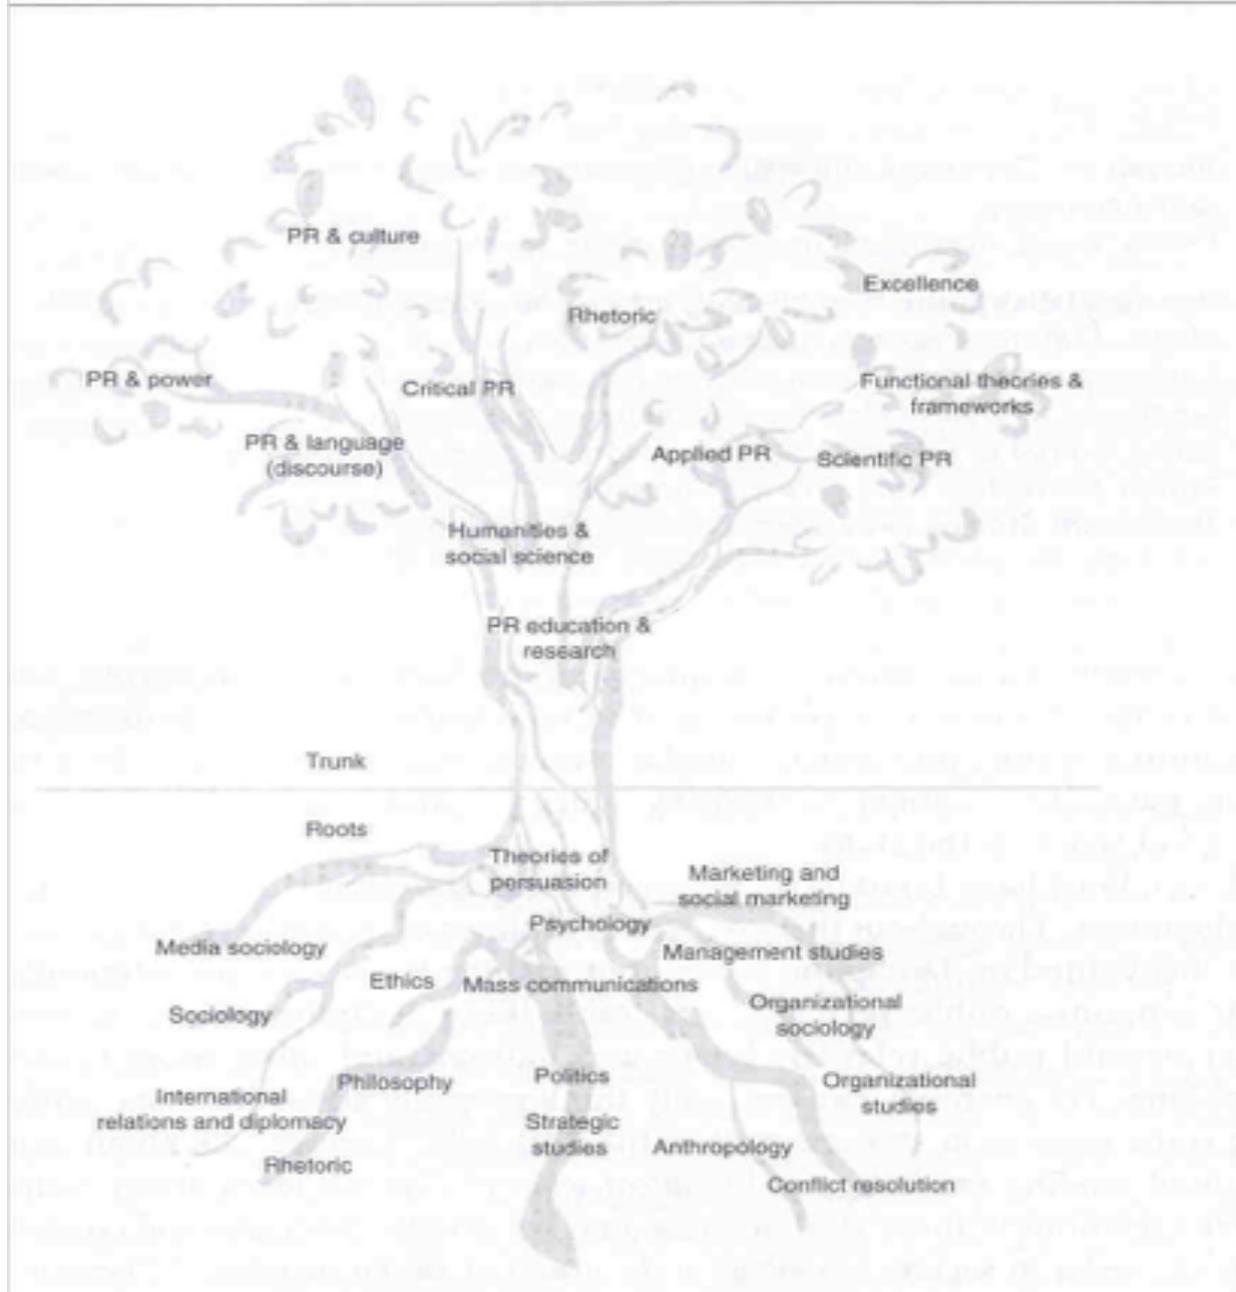

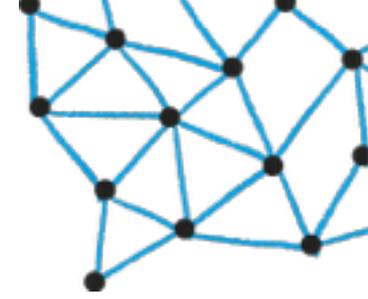

Executive pay began to grow around the same time as income equality in the U.S. and has increased about fourfold since 1970, while average wages for all workers have remained relatively flat. Defenders of executive pay levels say the higher salaries are justified as the size and profits of companies grow.

INTEGRATED INTERNAL COMMUNICATIONS

Day to day management (employee relations)

Strategic (mission)

Project management (organisational development)

Nature of integrated internal communications

- Multidisciplinarity

In the increasingly complex business world communication skills alone are no longer sufficient. Professionals working in that area have to develop a much more diverse set of skills and a broader knowledge base.

- Multilevel

Managers act as bridges linking the different levels. - Face to Face communication is considered invaluable by employees.

Communication professionals can't provide effective communication for the whole organisation, especially in the Face – to- Face format.

Boundaries between communication function and other functions are no longer so clear.

- Knowledge sharing

Formal and informal exchanges through ongoing social interactions, which mobilise knowledge that is dispersed around the organisation.

Tacit knowledge transfer – not all knowledge is transferable to written form.

- Efficiency

effective knowledge sharing is fundamental for maintaining competitive advantage.

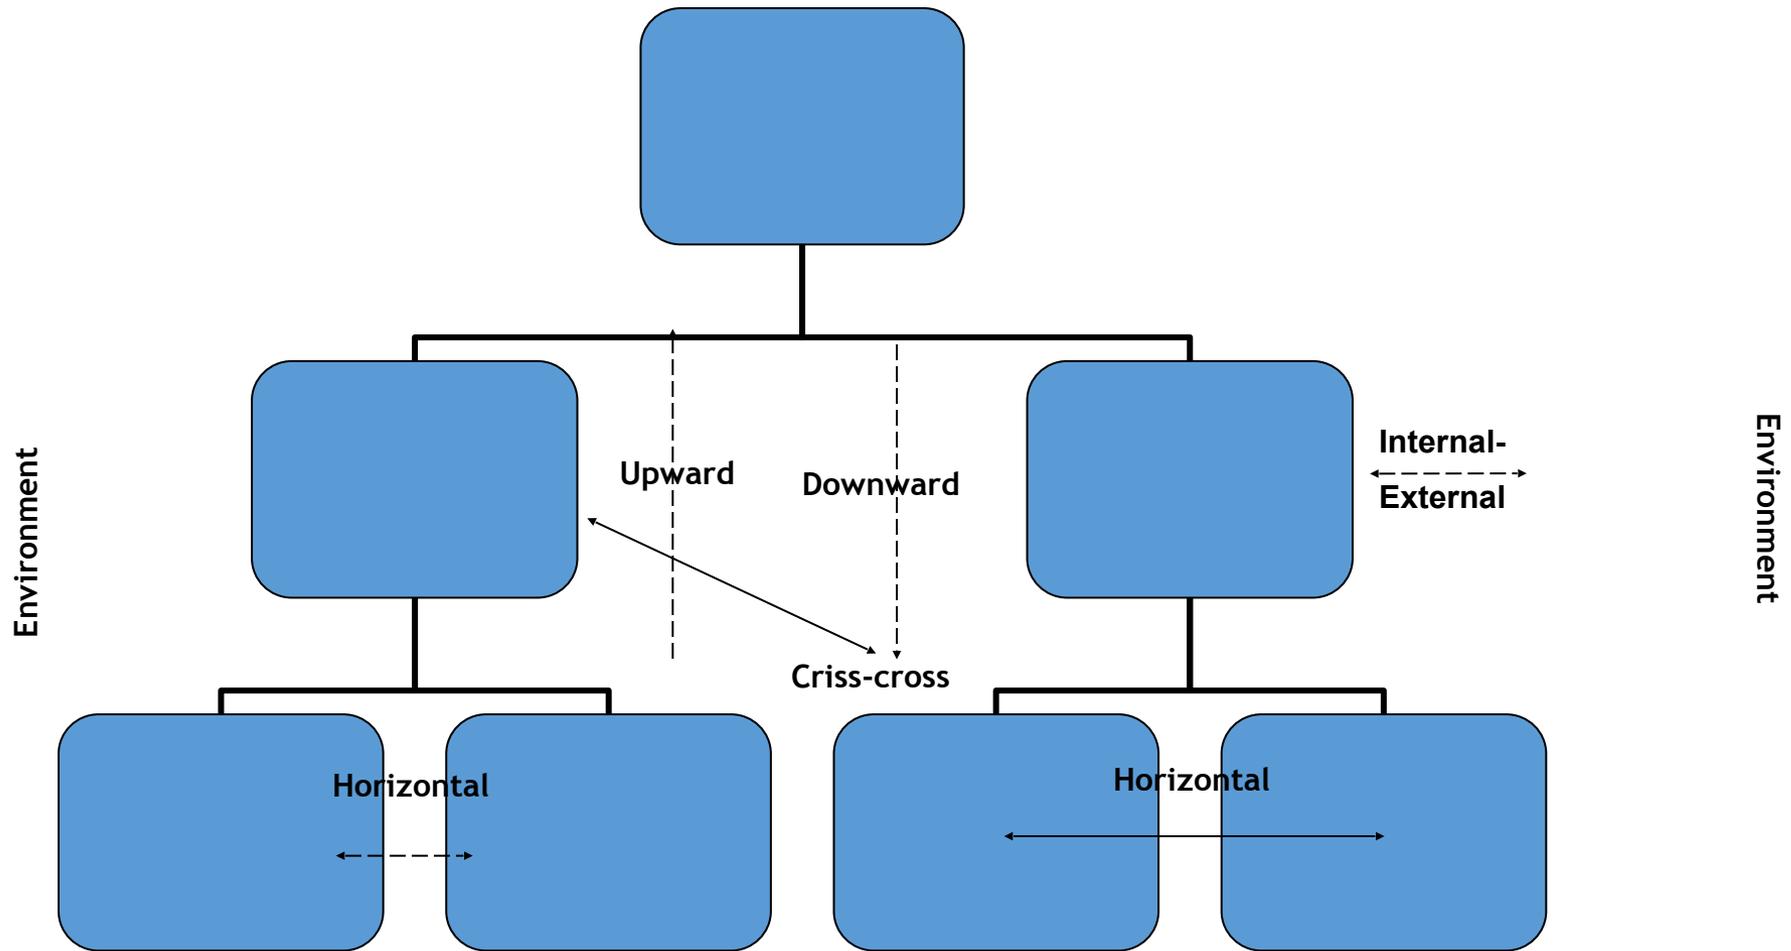

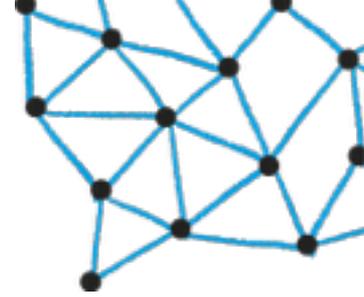

“Internal communications happens constantly within organisations and includes information chat on the “grapevine” as well as managed communication.”

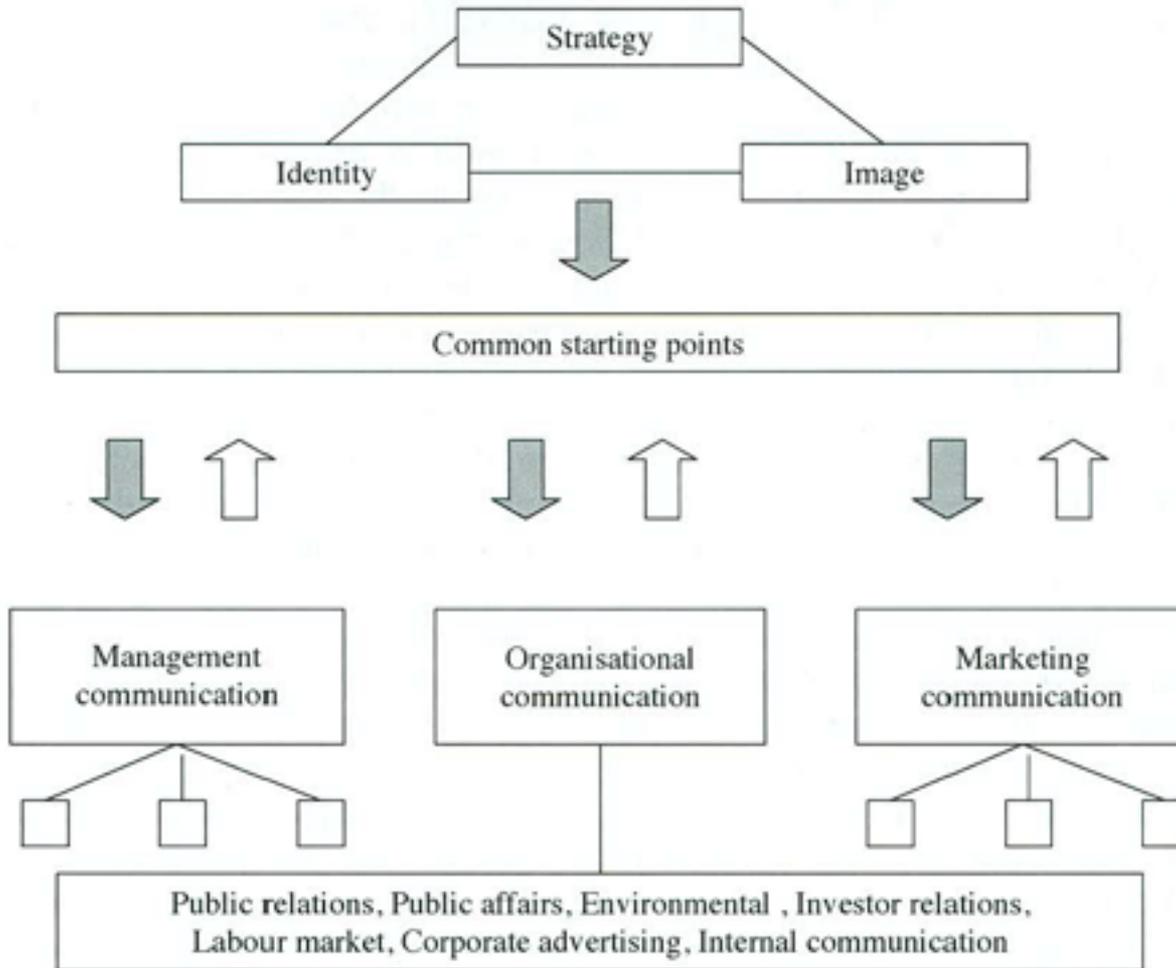

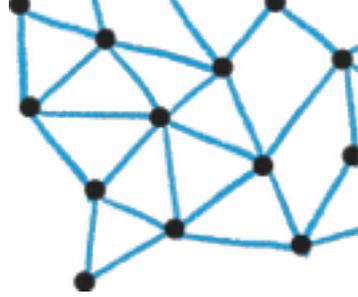

Mary Welch, Lancashire Business School, UK

Internal Communication Flows in an Organisation

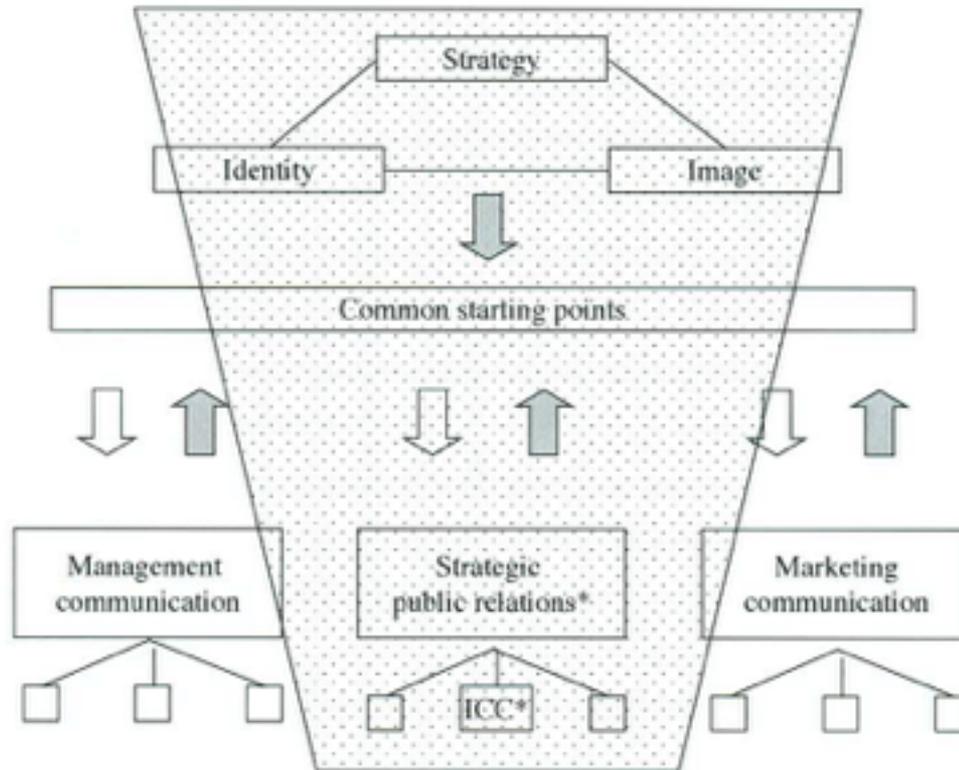

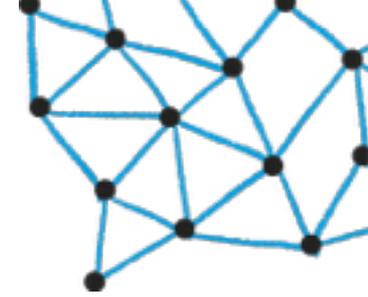

Managed communication system

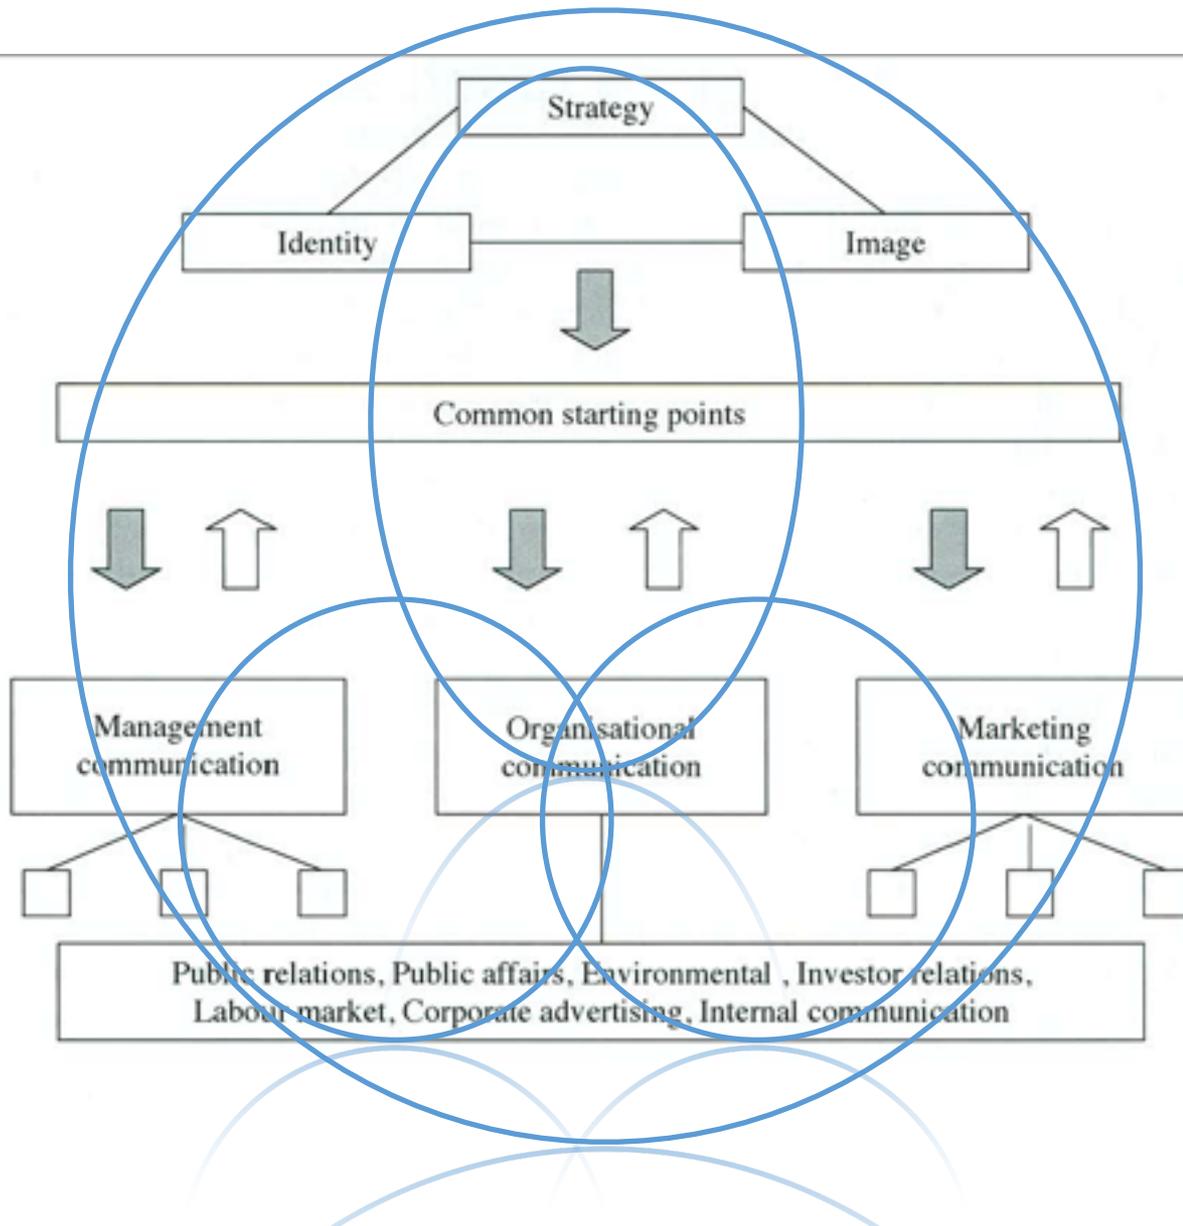

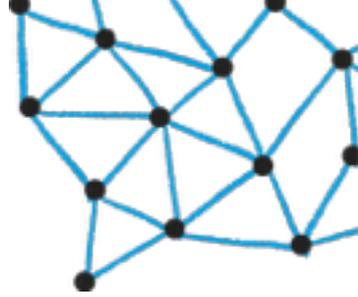

The outcome is relationship, thus relationship management is relevant for internal communications.

...or focus on public relations discipline?

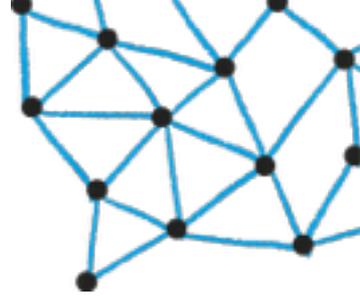

...my choice is managed communication system

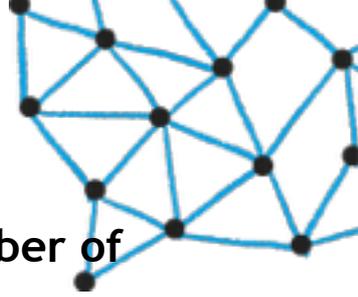

We can not isolate other communications in organisations, not create clear boundaries.

A stakeholder approach to internal communication

But, employees are usually treated as a single public

To overcome that misleading principle, newer theoretical approaches differentiate internal stakeholders groups.

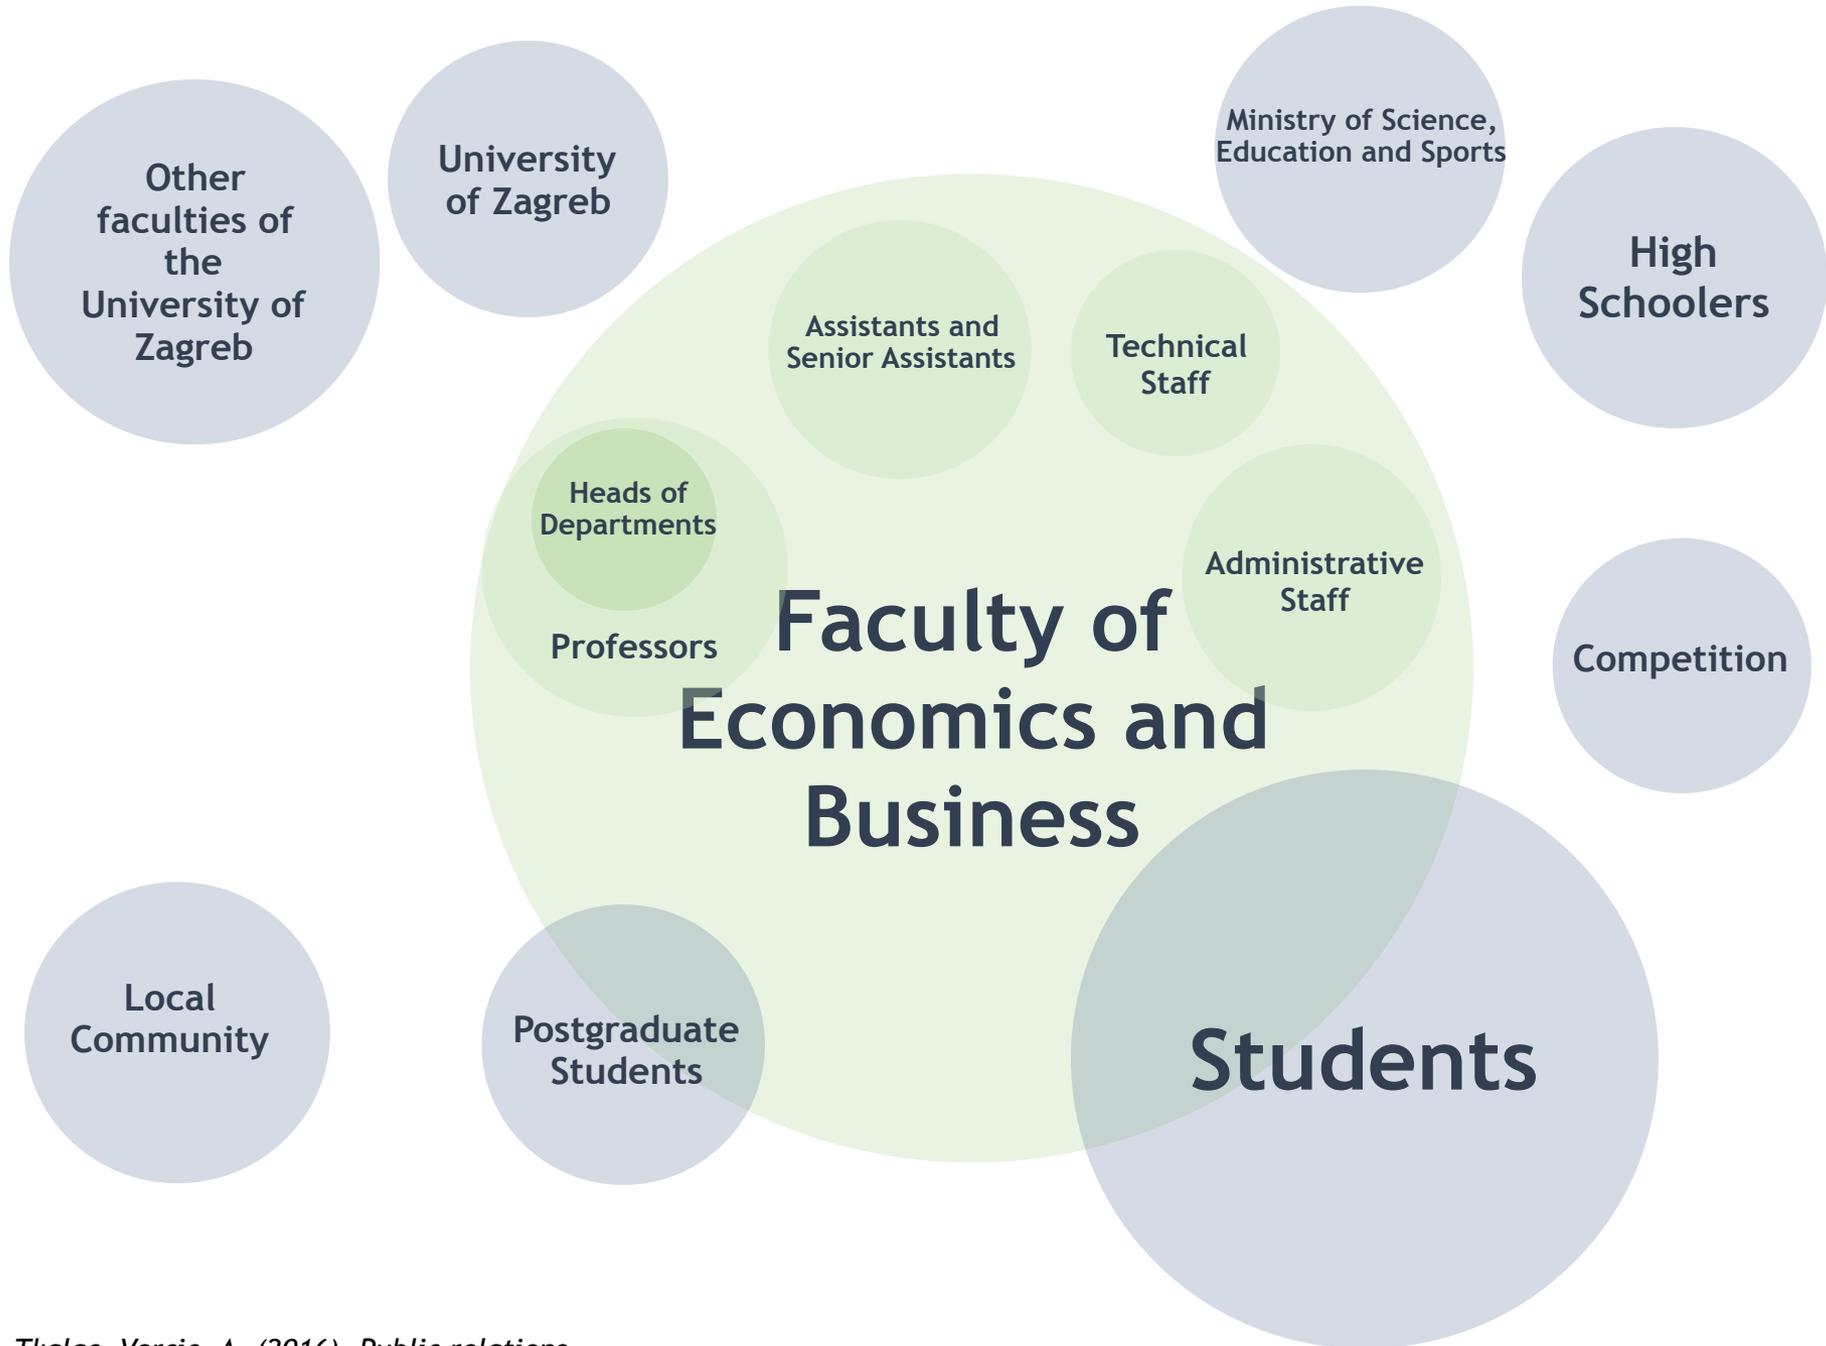

Differentiating internal stakeholders could be approached from a number of directions:

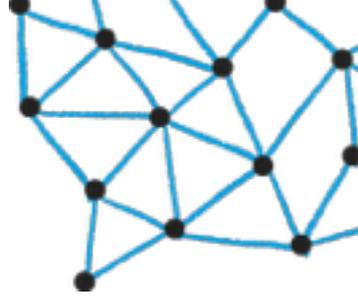

- segmentation by demographics
- occupational classification systems

Different sectors have different employee grouping depending on their particular purpose.

e.g. UK higher education, following staff groupings are commonly identified:

- manual and assistant workers
- academic support
- administrative
- academic
- research

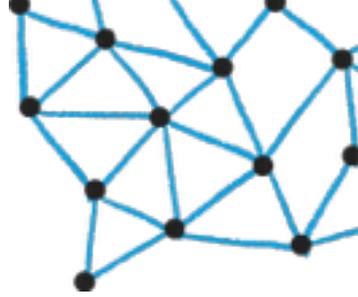

Or structural levels could be used to identify broad organisation stakeholder groups

- Strategic management - the dominant coalition, top management or strategic managers (CEOs, senior management teams)
- Day to day management - supervisors, middle managers or line-managers (directors, heads of departments, team leaders, division leaders, the CEOs as line managers)
- Work teams - departments, divisions
- Project management teams - internal communication review group, company wide e-mail implementation group

Internal communication matrix - WHO communicates, to WHOM, in what WAY, with what content, and for what PURPOSE?

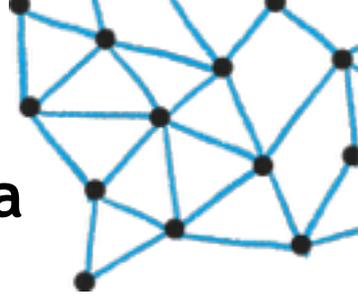

Dimension	Level	Direction	Participants	Content
1. Internal line management communication	Line managers/supervisors	Predominantly two-way	Line managers-employees	Employees' roles Personal impact, e.g. appraisal discussions, team briefings
2. Internal team peer communication	Team colleagues	Two-way	Employee-employee	Team information, e.g. team task discussions
3. Internal project peer communication	Project group colleagues	Two-way	Employee-employee	Project information, e.g. project issues
4. Internal corporate communication	Strategic managers/top management	Predominantly one-way	Strategic managers-all employees	Organisational/corporate issues, e.g. goals, objectives, new developments, activities and achievements

Goals of internal communication

1. Awareness
2. Understanding
3. Commitment
4. Engagement
5. Efficiency

Controlled media

internal newsletters newspapers
mgmt.'s annual address to staff

video presentations podcasts

allow control of message content, format and channels

Uncontrolled media

print and broadcast media

line management

gatekeepers
filter & distort message

Which media is more efficient?

Ethical dilemma

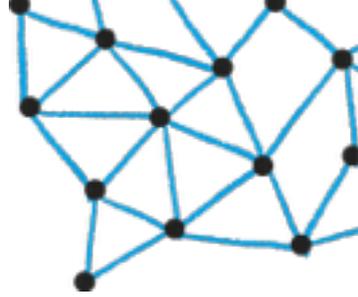

Internal communication & controlled media

Isn't that propaganda?

Heath's revision of Roman scholar of rhetoric Quintilian's maxim

“The good organisation communicating well”

It is all about effectiveness!

The quality of supervisory communication & information exchange within the peer group positive correlation with revenue and performance

improved productivity

higher quality of service and products

increased levels of innovation

reduced absenteeism

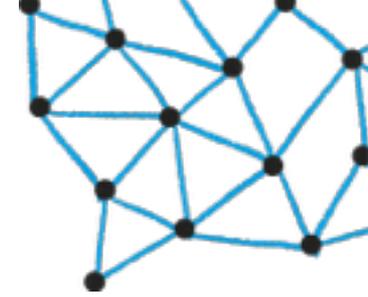

reduced costs

fewer strikes

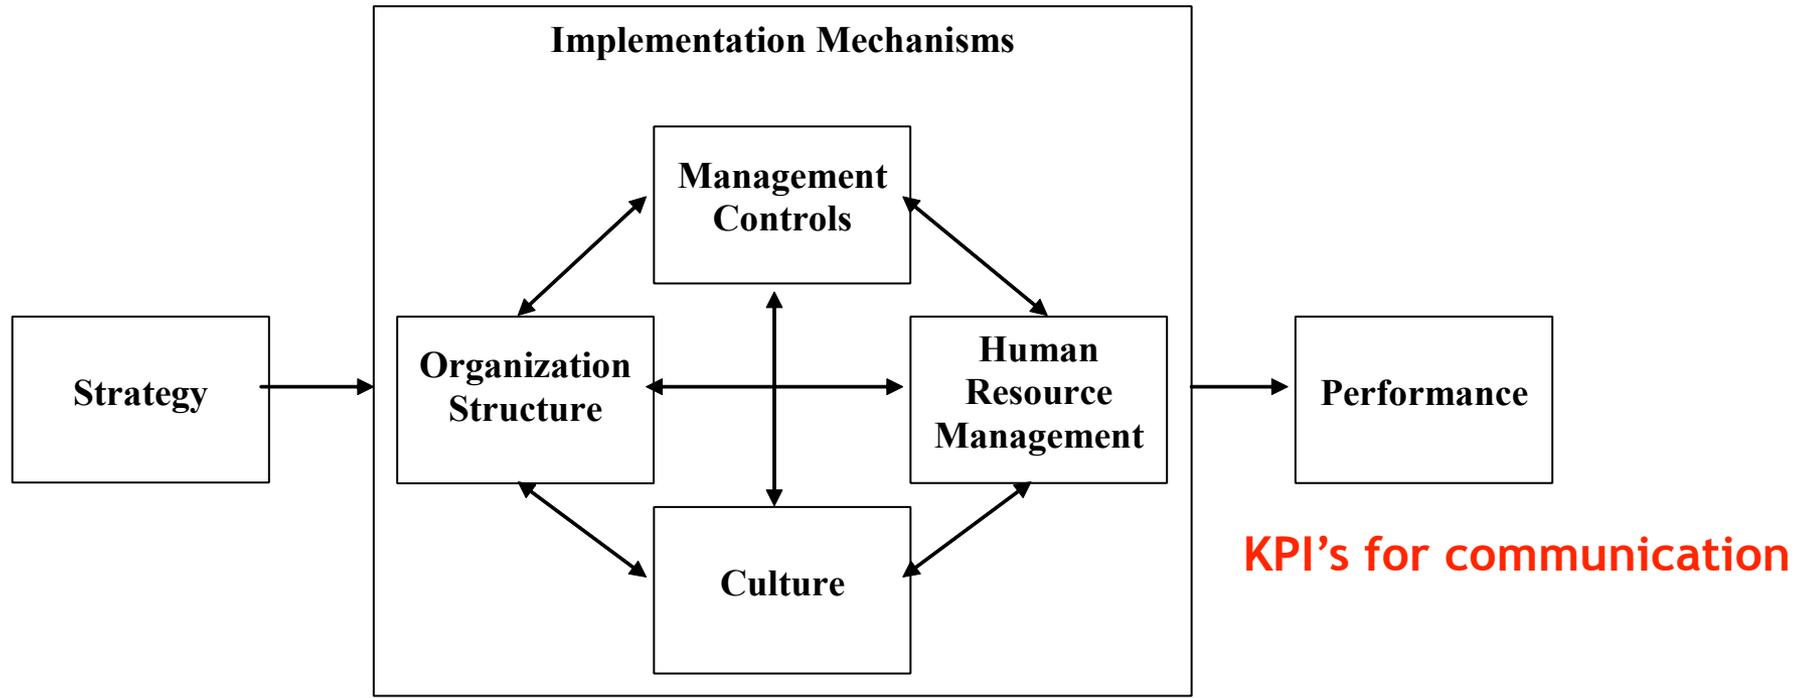

Do's

#1 Create internal communication strategy!

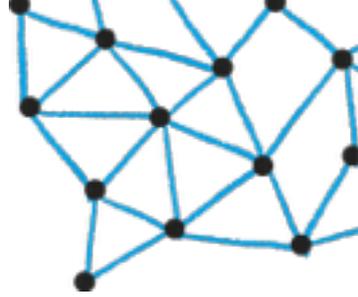

Framework for Strategy Implementation

#2 two-way

ask create deliver

feedback

#3 walk the talk

#4 WE feeling of importance

starting from awareness, to get understanding and develop commitment which leads to the feeling of belonging = WE feeling

#5 responsive to environment/align with external communication

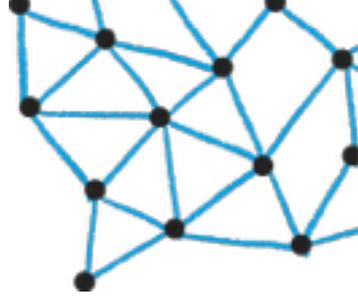

#6 communicate early, don't wait for rumours

#7 use new technologies instead of paper based communication channels

#8 make it simple, straightforward

Dont's

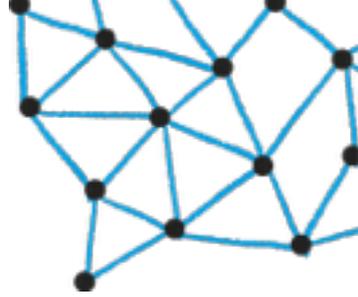

#1 Don't manipulate

#2 Don't forget to develop listening skills, especially management

#3 Don't forget to ask for feedback and apply what you have learned

#4 Don't think only about communication channels

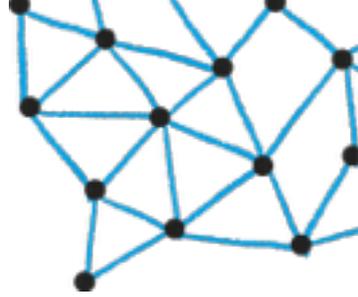

#5 Don't deliver too much content. More is not necessarily better. Information flood leads to information overload.

Before we close don't's don't forget

what brings the best results.....

THANK YOU!
